

Political Science

Geneva's Political Science program helps students understand and assess the discipline of political science, theories of politics, political systems, and governmental structures, and the tools used in social science research. Students are encouraged to develop their reasoning, analytic and communication skills, and to apply what they are learning to contemporary political issues. In addition, students apply a biblical perspective to the study, practice, and transformation of politics.

We offer off-campus study opportunities such as the Coalition of Christian Outreach, the Middle East Studies Program in Cairo, the Russian Studies Program in Moscow and more.
